Subject: Oversight panel hope to see Pruitt travel docs 'soon'

More than a week after its initial deadline, the House Oversight Committee is still awaiting records concerning EPA Administrator Scott Pruitt's travel habits.

"The committee has been in consistent contact with the EPA regarding the status of our request," a spokeswoman told POLITICO. "We expect a productive response soon."

Extensions for agencies are not uncommon when they involve voluminous records to search. EPA spokesman Jahan Wilcox said in a statement: "We have been in contact with Chairman [Trey] Gowdy and are accommodating his request as quickly as possible."

Gowdy sought copies of all the flights taken by Pruitt, waivers for first- or business-class travel and records of other staff who accompanied him on trips in a late February letter, setting a March 6 deadline for a response. Pruitt said he'd start flying coach, at least some of the time, in response to the outcry over his travel habits.

WHAT'S NEXT: The committee said it expects a response from EPA "soon."
